Early Completion
Review Committee

When a student requests a Research Results Presentation to be held for early completion, the academic supervisor will set up a Preliminary Review Committee to conduct a preliminary review.

When the committee determines that the student is qualified to complete the program early, the academic supervisor will recommend the department chair to approve the student's early completion of the program.

The Department Council deliberates whether or not the student's early completion is appropriate based on the submitted documents prescribed in Article 2 of the graduate school's internal regulations on early completion. When the council determines that the student is qualified to complete the program early, it will recommend that the dean of the graduate school approves the student's early completion.

On the recommendation by the dean of the graduate school, the Early Completion Review Committee reviews whether or not the student is qualified to complete the program early.

When the Early Completion Review Committee determines that the student is qualified to complete the program early, the student's dissertation is accepted and reviewed according to the normal dissertation review schedule.

However, if the committee specifies a particular review method, the dissertation will be reviewed accordingly.
